Most adults think federal funding should be used to help prevent teen pregnancy. Specifically, the overwhelming majority of adults want taxpayer-funded efforts to prevent teen pregnancy to be invested in interventions that have been shown through careful evaluation to actually change teen sexual behavior. In short, when it comes to preventing teen pregnancy, taxpayers want their money invested in what works.

INVESTING IN RESULTS

Data presented here are drawn from a national telephone survey conducted for The National Campaign by SSRS, an independent research company. Interviews were conducted in November 2014 among a nationally representative sample of 1,004 adults age 18 and older. The margin of error for this survey is +/-3.1% at the 95% confidence level. About one-third of respondents described their political views as conservative (34%) and 28% described themselves as liberals. Regarding political party affiliation, 41% of respondents say they are Independents, 30% Democrats, and 23% Republicans.